

Bengali Myths (The Legendary Past)

The rich tradition of bengali storytelling is evident in this compilation of myths, drawn from the substantial bengal collections of the british museum, which range from the courtly to the popular, and date from the 9th century to the present day the myths demonstrate the connections of history and myth, and feature works from undivided bengal (west bengal in the union of india, and the sovereign state of bangladesh) the stories are mostly drawn from the hindu tradition and feature powerful goddesses such as durga, whose puja is celebrated throughout the world wherever bengalis are settled; kali, after whom the city of calcutta is probably named; and others such as manasa (the snake goddess), sarasvati (the goddess of learning), and laxmi (the goddess of wealth) however, gods and goddesses are not the whole story scrolls used in storytelling are filled with exciting myths that cross the hindu-muslim divide the most important of all such scrolls in the british museum collection tells the story of the muslim saint, gazi pir, who brought islam to bengal with index and numerous colour illustrations
